

The Cottage Request Information

Intended user: School groups, community organizations, and prospective Cottage clients

Purpose and directions

Purpose: Explain how a possible Cottage learning experience moves from an early request to teacher review without creating an active public inquiry form.

When to use: Review before contacting the school about a food-production, service, or event request that may fit current Culinary Arts instruction.

An instructional request first

The Cottage is the existing Culinary Arts student-based enterprise. Every accepted request must create worthwhile student learning and remain feasible within current coursework, safety requirements, facilities, schedule, resources, and student readiness.

Requests that may be considered

- An approved school or community request with a clear audience, date, location, and educational connection.
- Food production, service, or event support that can be completed within current course techniques, units, resources, and supervision.
- A client-centered experience that gives students appropriate practice in planning, production, service, quality, communication, or reflection.

Lead time

Requests should reach the approved school contact at least 15 school days before the requested service date. Larger, off-site, or more complex requests require additional lead time. Late requests may be declined because purchasing, safety review, production planning, instruction, or student preparation cannot be compressed responsibly.

What the teacher reviews

☐ The request has clear educational value and fits current curriculum.

☐ The date, production window, service time, location, audience, and client expectations are workable.

☐ The menu or service can be adapted to available techniques, ingredients, equipment, facilities, staffing, and budget procedures.

☐ Food-safety, allergen, transport, holding, service, cleanup, and accessibility needs can be addressed.

☐ Students are prepared for the assigned work and can be supervised appropriately.

☐ The request does not displace required instruction or create an unsupported financial, legal, transportation, or staffing commitment.

Menu and service limits

A client may describe the need, audience, preferences, dietary information, timing, and desired outcome. The teacher determines whether the request fits instruction and retains final authority over the menu, production method, quantities, student roles, safety controls, service plan, substitutions, and any change or cancellation.

Communication and acceptance

Students may practice professional communication, costing, proposals, and event planning under teacher direction. They do not enter contracts, control funds, promise a menu, or make purchasing or service commitments. A request is not accepted until the teacher and any required district owner confirm it through an approved communication route.

No active inquiry form

This public page does not collect requests. Expressing interest does not guarantee acceptance, a particular menu, a service date, or student availability. Use the monitored school contact route identified by the district when one is approved; do not send private dietary, medical, student, payment, or agreement information through a public page.
